Great scenery and a few very challenging obstacles combine to make a great option for someone looking for a quick trip into the mountains. This system provides many miles of OHV trails and can be accessed from the town of Leadville or from Cottonwood Pass near Gypsum. These winding single-track routes are great for those looking for a technical, rocky, and tight trail through the high-country juniper forest. Highly technical, rocky, and tight trail through the high-country juniper forest. Highly suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This large system of roads stretches north out of Idaho Springs and offers many different routes that can satisfy mountain drive. Most of the road is graded; however, water and mud can cause problems for smaller vehicles. The road starts with an easy dirt road that winds through the foothills. A few muddy stretches, rocks, and even a waterfall will test your ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

This new open OHV area is conveniently located just north of Rifle off of I-70. One of the more popular difficult trails in the state, Holy Cross offers the hard-core OHV rider. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

This unique trail west of Longmont provides many different routes that can satisfy mountain drive. Most of the road is graded; however, water and mud can cause problems for smaller vehicles. The road starts with an easy dirt road that winds through the foothills. A few muddy stretches, rocks, and even a waterfall will test your ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

This system provides many miles of OHV trails and can be accessed from the town of Leadville or from Cottonwood Pass near Gypsum. These winding single-track routes are great for those looking for a technical, rocky, and tight trail through the high-country juniper forest. Highly technical, rocky, and tight trail through the high-country juniper forest. Highly suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This large system of roads stretches north out of Idaho Springs and offers many different routes that can satisfy mountain drive. Most of the road is graded; however, water and mud can cause problems for smaller vehicles. The road starts with an easy dirt road that winds through the foothills. A few muddy stretches, rocks, and even a waterfall will test your ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.

This area includes a system of 4WD roads and high mountain passes spanning This area includes several routes open to all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Northwest Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

The Seven Mile trail starts simply enough but quickly turns into a wet, rocky ride. The nearby Ellis Jeep Trail (Red Park Road) is close to 14 miles long and has lots of small waterfalls and Ohio River crossings. The Ellis Trail has been around for some time and is a popular trail in northern Colorado. This vast area managed by the BLM has many trails and is suitable for all vehicle types including the full size vehicles.

Most suitable for these vehicle types: rock crawlers.